"BABY JOE" MESI

The goal is clear, the stage is set: "Baby Joe is on course to be the Heavyweight Champion of the World, a la his idol, Rocky Marciano. Like the Rock, Joe is a swarming, slugging warrior who never steps backward, not from his opponent, not from his goal, not from the price of hard work it takes to arrive there."

Baby Joe Mesi is on his way of making his dream of becoming Heavyweight Champion of the World. Hailing from a suburb of Buffalo, New York, "Baby Joe" as his family first called him, first hit the boxing scene as New York State 1994-1996 Super Heavyweight Golden Gloves Champion. Joe also captured the Gold Medal in the 1993 Empire State Games. Joe rounded out his amateur career by becoming a finalist in every national tournament he entered.

On his way to the 1996 Olympics, Joe scored upset victories in all his international competitions. Joe completed his amateur career as the surprising finalist in the 1996 Olympic trials and box offs. Boxing as an unaffiliated and an underdog contestant, Joe overcame every boxing and political opponent on his way to the finals. One heartbreaking loss in the finals of the Olympic box offs made him the 1996 U.S. Olympic Alternate in the Super-Heavyweight Division at the Olympic Games in Atlanta. Several of Joe's former amateur victims are now very successful professionals.

Since turning professional Joe has won 36 straight bouts including 29 KO's, 0 losses, and hopes to be fighting for a world title soon.
